Improvisation
on the Spectrum

When it comes to music, I improvise easily...

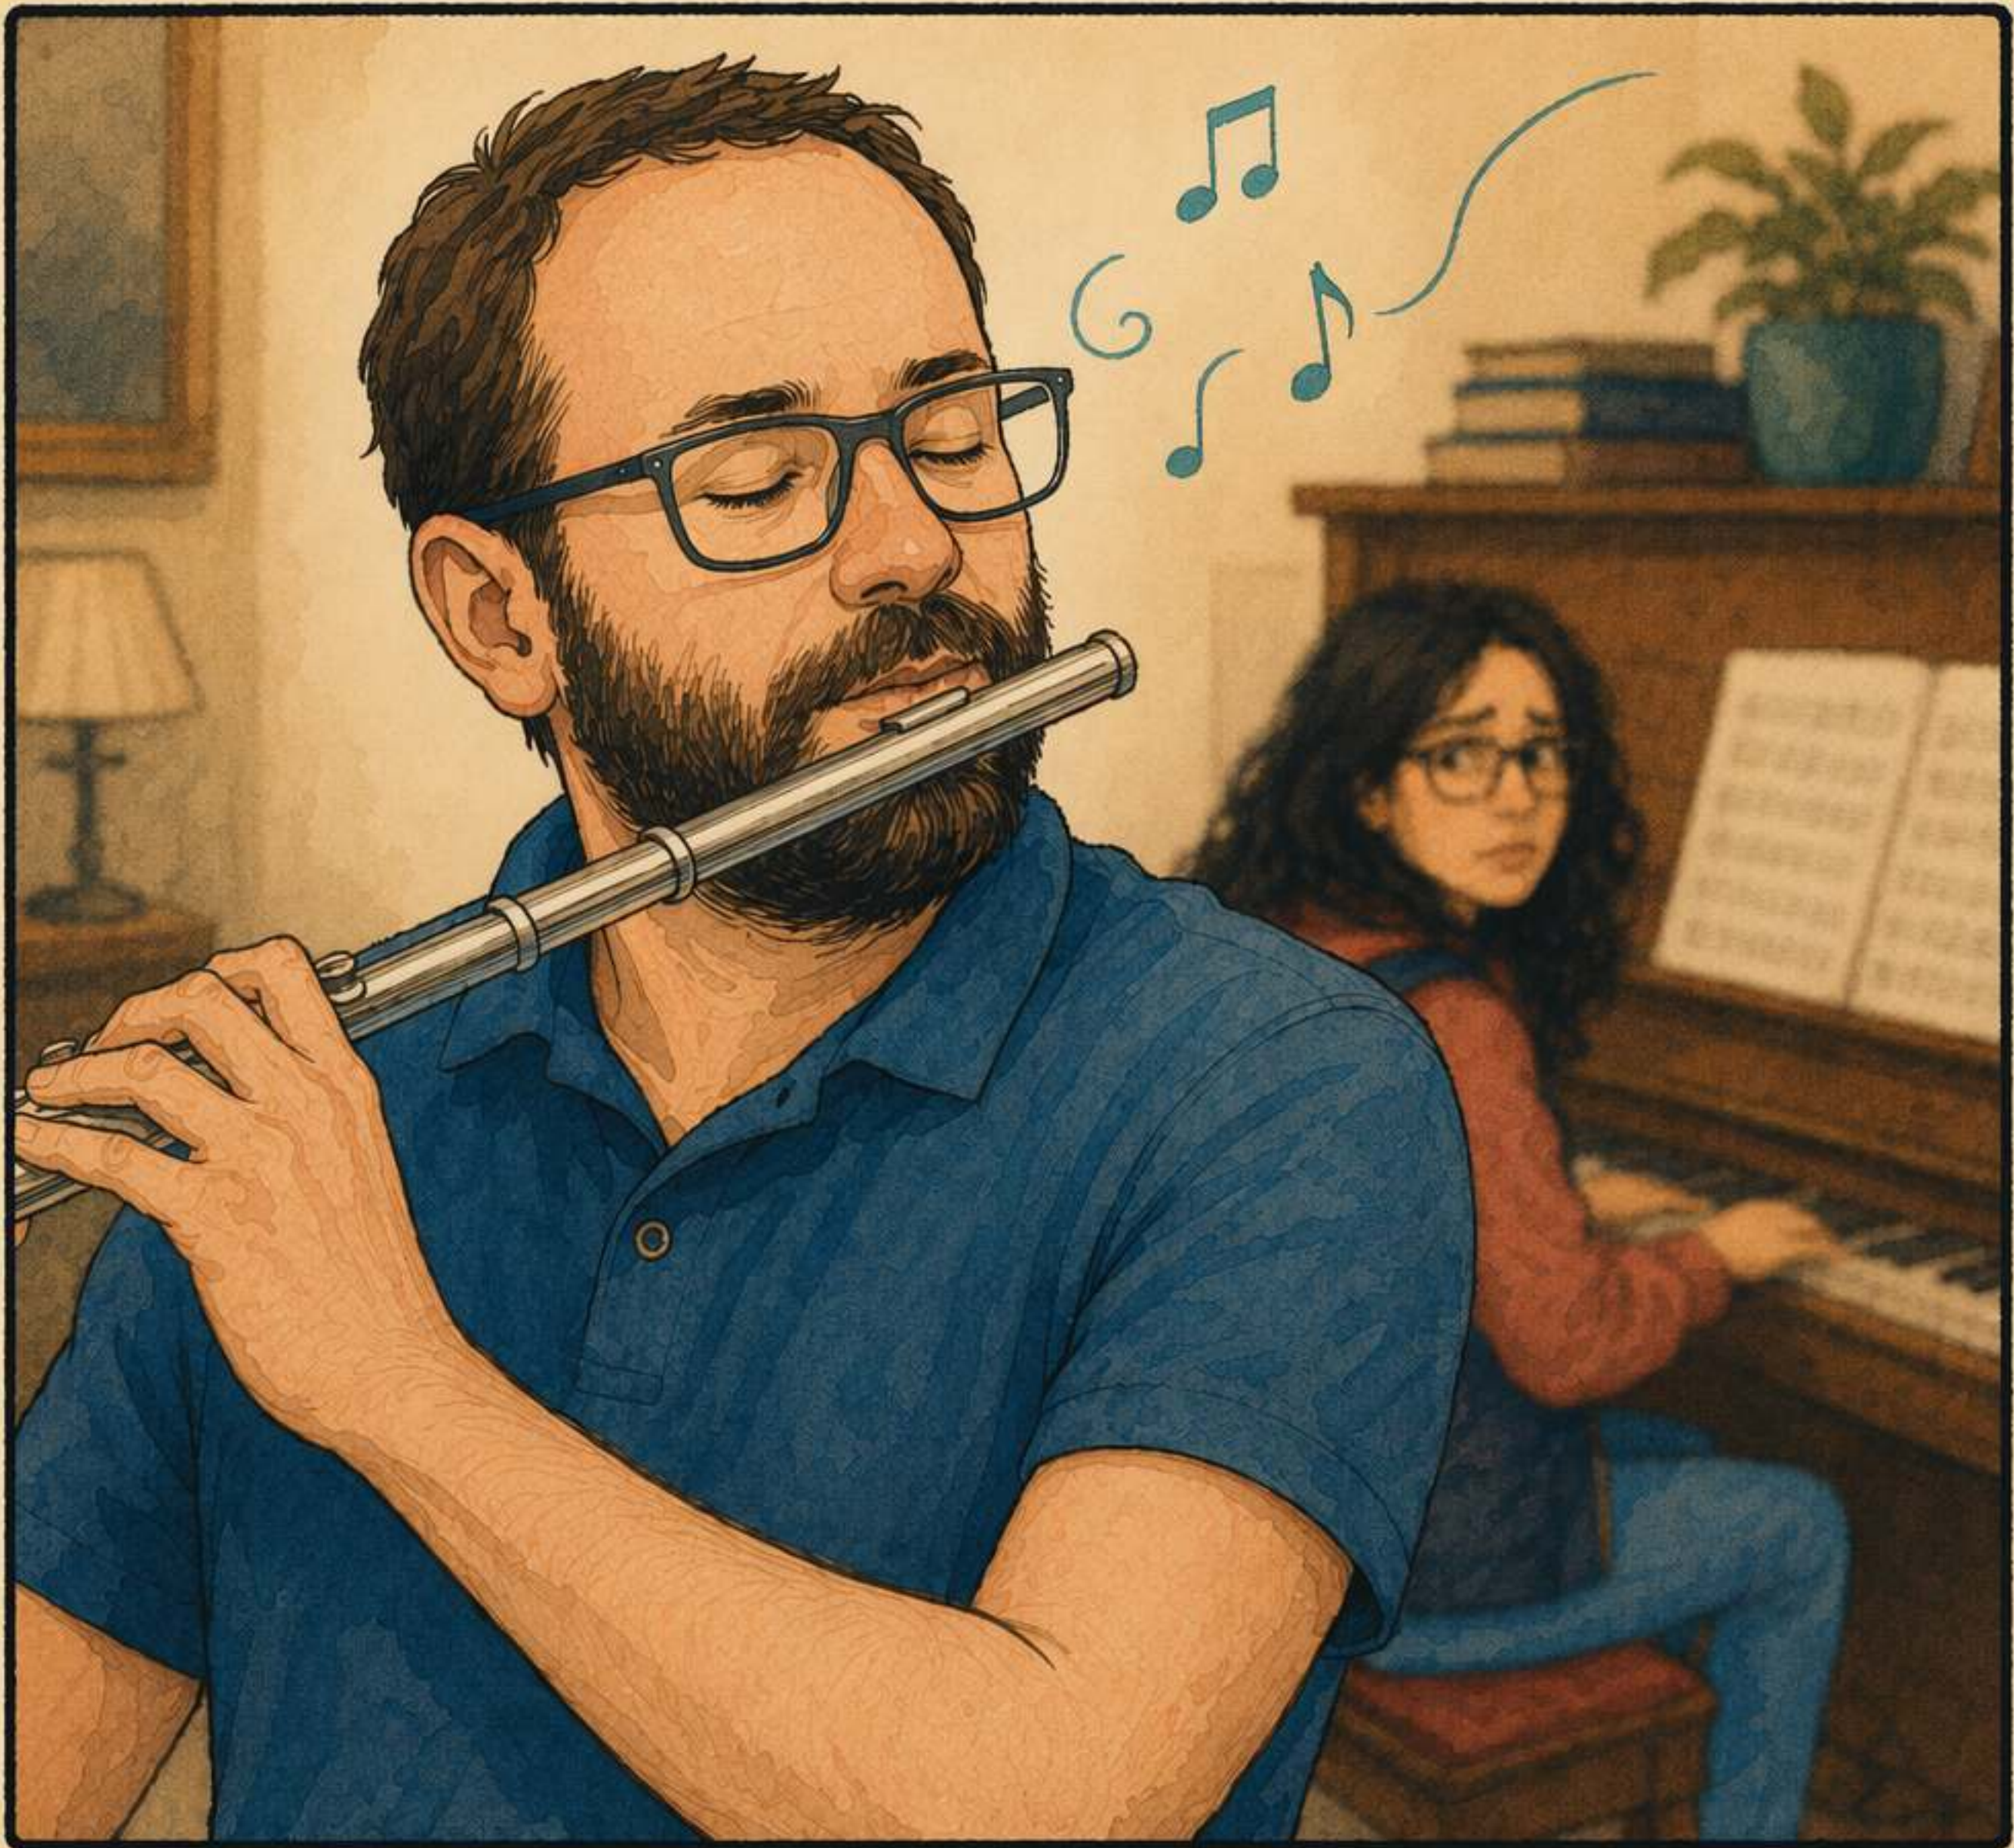

My wife, on the other hand,
relies on the precise notes she's learned.

If I play the wrong note...

I just improvise my way through it.

My wife can improvise
when she makes social mistakes.

But when I make a mistake socially, I freeze.

I saw this person
before but didn't greet them. Should I say hi
now, or is it awkward?

Why are you
looking at me
like that?

*I can navigate social interactions by rules,
but improvising often leads to awkward situations.*
